The high price of beef should encourage farmers to raise more cows. It requires two or three years to produce a steer for market, but only a few months need lapse before a large number of calves can be marketed. A farmer has always a home market for his own table and he can avoid high prices for beef by substituting poultry in the place of more expensive meat.—Texas Stock and Farm Journal.

(COMMUNICATED.)

I understand that reports have been circulated throughout the county calculated to place Mr. William F. Cox, Justice of the Peace, and myself in a false light as to our actions in refusing to issue a warrant for persons suspected of the murder of Harriet Bolloit.

This warrant was asked upon the statements of a person who less than sixty days prior to that time had been declared by Probate Court to be a person of unsound mind and whose statements were in direct conflict with the statements made by her immediately after the supposed murder. The detective and others asking for the warrant at the time refused to make an affidavit, and consequently neither Mr. Cox nor myself cared to involve the county in the expense of a prosecution where no competent witness was willing to make oath to the truth of such charges.

I am now willing as I have always been to have a warrant issued against any person suspected of murder against whom there exists any tangible evidence, or against whom any reputable citizen will make an affidavit. I do not believe it my duty, however, to institute proceedings that can only heap costs upon the county unless there be a reasonable probability that the committing magistrate will bind them over.

Respectfully,
CAMILLE J. STANTON,
Proc. Atty.
